Unimune is an acronym for University, Museum and Negotiations, which are represented by three interconnected institutions that are located in separate parts of the Unimune building. The university focuses on conflict- and peace studies and will educate hundreds of students each year. The public museum hosts a permanent, updateable exhibition that will provide a historical background to current armed conflicts, which is complemented with temporary exhibits in external galleries. Negotiations between warring parties and other conferences will be hosted by Unimune's conference centre. The Unimune is surrounded by low buildings that form a dense city with housing areas, offices for various organizations as well as shops, restaurants and other facilities. The city also houses several satellite facilities to Unimune's institutions, for example libraries. A data collection centre and a campus. The Unimune was designed by Raumlabor. This design project is still in progress
